

Disability-Illness Superbook Book 16. Canadian Disability Guide

The Charter for Rights and Freedoms in Canada is the Canadian equivalent of the ADA Act. Be familiar with rights under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, human rights legislation, provincial education acts and in Ontario, the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act. Vocational guidance for the handicapped books are at #650.1408 or HV1568.5. Everybody has disabled people somewhere in their family tree. Lots of people are born disabled due to genetic reasons or as the result of pregnancy complications. People get injured or acquire debilitating diseases at some point in life. Ive lived with both, a disabled relative and serious injuries of my own. The thing is that the world goes on. It doesnt slow down or stop just because someone is disabled. We can do so much politically and the rest we have to do on our own to fit into the world somehow in a useful, productive way to get the money we want to buy the things that will help us survive and enjoy our lives more. The best thing I ever saw about disabilities was the 1940s movie called Shaggy Bush which was a movie about a family going through ups and downs. There was a bit in there where the mother said her daughters disability didnt mean she was doomed. It just meant that she would still do what she felt in her spirit with her life with this extra nuisance to deal with. Theres a lot of discrimination. You cant legislate it away. The only way to solve it is to prove to prejudiced people that you can do the things you do as a job or for a career just as well or better than other people. As a group, disabled people are the poorest category within society. The government could do more but it wont happen until disabled people of all kinds come together to form a powerful voting block capable of swaying elections like the AARP for people over 50. There has to be some kind of major aggressive program to train disabled people and put them out into the workforce. They should get preferential treatment for all government jobs. There are all kinds of assisted living retirement communities for seniors who can afford them. There could be living communities built especially for disabled people. Were wealthy enough as a society to do this but we choose to spend the money on warfare and all kinds of other foolishness like border guards between Canada and the United States. Were spozed to be best friends. I hope this book will help you but there are a lot of holes in it. Its a first edition. It has lots of room for improvement. To all the disabled and seriously ill people out there, this is your book. Send me articles, websites, tips, etc. to help make it the one central disabilities help book in the world.
