

ICD-10 in Home Care

This guide to ICD-10-CM is a list of the most common codes relating to those used in the homecare industry. The list of codes found in this manual is not meant to be comprehensive, but a resource for those codes most commonly used; after all, ICD-10 contains nearly 70,000 codes. This guide weeds out codes infrequently or not typically used in the homecare setting in favor of more common codes utilized. What is ICD-10? ICD-10-CM is the newest coding system which will be in full use in homecare as of 10/1/15. Useful for nurses, home care office personnel, coders, and administrators this manual has been developed to assist end-users in home care agencies in acquiring a basic understanding of ICD-10 as it applies to homecare. Why is accurate coding important? Any agency which has ever been the focus of an audit by the state, or by CMS, will understand intimately why accuracy in coding is important. These codes are submitted along with billing claims and will raise flags if they are not accurate. This means that codes must not only be backed up with written orders from the physician who has initiated the order, but that the coder must input the correct code which has been suggested by the physician. Failure to code correctly may result in denied billing claims, or worse yet, trigger an audit which results in an attempt to recoup monies which were claimed via false coding (even if this coding was an honest mistake).
