The color of a sweet potato provides some valuable information about their nutrition content. Orange fleshed sweet potatoes are one of nature's greatest sources of beta-carotene and vitamin A. Carotenoids help strengthen eye sight, boost immunity and also prevent the risk of lung cancer. The spectacular purple colored potatoes attain their color from anthocyanin pigments that provide antioxidant and anti-inflammatory benefits. Besides vitamin A, sweet potatoes are also known to be rich in vitamin B6, vitamin C and vitamin E. Studies reveal vitamin B6 to be unarguably important in preventing the blocking of arteries and heart attacks. Vitamin C and E, on the other hand, have been known to maintain the health of ones skin and hair, making sweet potatoes an important beauty food.
